TOLLS TO MANY CHRISTMAS

Christmas for a little girl? Bet did you ever dolls for ten thousand little girls? We found a man who not only has done it this year, but has been doing it now for 15 years. No, it isn't Santa Claus, although this reporter has never interviewed any one who comes nearer filling the qualifications of old Kris Krinkle himself. It is none other than Colonel Wesley Bouterse, the Commander of The Salvation Army for the State of Virginia. We found the Colonel and Mrs. Bouterse in Richmond displaying what looked like a car load of beautifully dressed dolls, all frills and lace and every one dressed differently. And not one for sale at any price. They are all to be given away to youngsters known to The Salvation Army who never get a new toy for Christmas.

"How," I inquired, "did you ever assemble such a fabulous group of doll-babies?" "These dolls," said the Colonel, "represent very little money, but countless hours of time on the part of hundreds of women who dress them for us." It seems that The Salvation Army buys the dolls undressed from the factory. Every fall after school starts, Mrs. Bouterse asks the women from clubs and industrial groups to dress the dolls in their spare time. The idea was introduced in Charlotte, North Carolina fifteen years ago. It spread rapidly over the entire nation. This year there will be nearly one hundred thousand dolls dressed by women in every state and distributed by Army workers on Christmas day. Each doll represents a 65 cent investment by The Salvation Army. The finished product couldn't be bought for $5.00 in a store.

My fancy fell on a red headed bride doll. What a beauty! I wanted to buy it for my niece. "Money can't buy these dolls," Mrs. Bouterse said, "but if you'll tell us of a little girl who hasn't one, we'll see that she get one this Christmas."

"Where does the money come from for the thousands of dolls?" I asked. The Colonel looked at me across a blond baby doll and said, "From people like you." And you want to know something? I bought myself $5.00 worth of that doll business. The Colonel tells me that they're not all paid for yet.
